

Scalable's Green Credentials Are Rewarded With ISO 14001 Certification

31 January 2009 - Scalable Communications Plc announces that it has successfully completed the phase 2 assessment of its Environmental Management System, achieving ISO 14001 certification, to compliment its ISO 9001 certification, awarded in 2008.

Both assessments were completed by a UKAS registered certification body which will conduct ongoing external assessment of the Quality and Environmental Management system, ensuring impartial review of the company's management processes.

In achieving ISO 14001 certification, Scalable has recognised the need to identify the aspects of its operations which can have an impact on the environment, including the impact the solutions it provides can have when used by its customers.

The need for an Environmental Management System is widely recognised and issues such as Global warming, climate change and energy usage are now top of the agenda. ISO 14001 meets the need by providing a system for managing an organisations impact on the environment that can be certified externally and compared to others around the world.

Simon Brown, Managing Director, Scalable Communications commented "More and more of our customers want to know they are dealing with an organisation which respects the environment. We will actively promote more environmentally friendly solutions and embrace every possible way to operate in a responsible manner to the environment whilst maintaining a successful and competitive business."

Brown continues: "In achieving both ISO certifications, it has not only ensured a more efficient and environmentally conscious service to our customers, but also streamlined processes internally by offering clearly defined guidelines to employees."
